Choriocarcinoma is a relatively uncommon gynaecological malignant neoplasia that behaves unpredictably. The heterogeneity of gene alterations in both histological subtypes (decidua-like and trophoblastic) and the disease progression makes the use of specific molecular markers for the clinical management of the patients difficult. In this study we evaluated the loss of heterozygosity (LOH) at different chromosomal sites, including tumor suppressor genes p16, p53 and Wilms tumor 1/wint, in choriocarcinomas from pregnancies complicated by molar pregnancy, spontaneous abortion and ectopic pregnancy.
